EFVs automatically halt the flow of gas caused by damage to service lines. Since December 2009, EFVs have been installed in new and replaced service lines that supply gas to single-family residences. The new requirements, which go into effect on April 14, 2017, broaden the requirement to multi-residential, small commercial applications, and lines with meter capacities exceeding 1,000 standard cubic feet per hour. The October 14, 2016, rule also requires natural gas utilities to allow customers to ask for an EFV retrofit.
